

A Portrait Artist

Through many years
he painted people as he saw them.
Patrons murmured,
"Somber tones,"
"Shadows deep."
Painting still, he wondered.

Musing in his studio,
reflected in a silvered glass,
He cried out with a gasp.
Himself it was he'd painted,
His pain, his sorrows dark.